Algorithm for Displaying the Top Ten

Pseudo Code

function TopTen(root) //Declare a new empty Binary tree.
    d <- Ø
    //itterate over the Lexographicly sorted array from the current binary tree foreach (movie in root.ToArray())
        //if null then we initilise the new binary tree
        if(d = null)
            d.Value <- new BinaryTree(movie)</pre> //otherwise we add the movie to the new tree sorting by popularity
        else //initilise at the point in the tree we are working with point <- d.Value</pre> //initilise a temporay value to let us update the point refrence if
            //the next child is null
            temp <- null
            //Create a new tree with just the thing we want, this is the leaf
            //we will eventually add toAdd <- new BinaryTree(movie)</pre> //while we aren't at the point to add while(true)
                //assign the current point to temp, to save the refrence
                temp <- point
                //compare the current node with the value to add.
                //if the node is less then move the current point down the left branch
                if(point.Value.Popularity < toAdd.Value.Popularity)</pre> point <- point.LeftChild</pre> //if that branch is a dead end, don't worry,
                    //just update the refrence held by temp, and then we're done.
                    if(point = null)
                         temp.LeftChild <- toAdd</pre> break
                //otherwise we travel down the right branch.
                else
                    point <- point.RightChild</pre> //again, if that branch does not exist,
                    //just assign it to our added value and exit.
                    if(point = null)
                         temp.RightChild <- toAdd
    //finally, now that we have got a new binary tree sorted by popularity, //Convert it to an array for easy iteration in display,
    return d.ToArray().Range(0,10)

```
function BinaryTree.ToArray()
  //Create a new Array of movies.
  movies <- Ø
  function RecursiveInOrder(Node) //if null then we don't need to keep going deeper.
       if(Node = null)
           return
       //first add all the left children
       RecursiveInOrder(Node.LeftChild)
       movies.Add(Node.Value)
       //then all the right children
       RecursiveInOrder(Node.RightChild)
   //Start the recursive function at the root.
  RecursiveInOrder(BinaryTree) //return the arrayed movies
  return movies

Time complexity analysis

The Algorithm will traverse the entire tree when iterating over it in the foreach loop, and again when converting the tree to an array in returning it. The binary insert preformed has a Average time complexity of $\log n$, and a worst case time complexity of n. as such the average complexity will be $n \log n$, and worst be n^2 .

$$C_{Best}(n) = 0(n \log n) + n$$

$$C_{average}(n) = 0(n \log n) + n$$

$$C_{worst}(n) = 0(n^2) + n$$

Functional tests

For the sake of shortening this, all menus that use the esc to exit use the same code, with just a different menu index, and they all work. As such I won't mention them. The same is true for the main, client and staff menus, as they are static accepting simple numeric input, there is quite literally a single switch stamen of logic, and they all work. As such they have been exempt from this reporting bar, the main menu, and screenshots of all pages.
